

(www.ethnologue.com) were adopted as the basis for the new ISO 639-3 draft standard. (In the process, the most recent edition of Ethnologue changed about 400 of its approximately 7500 3-letter language codes to match the ISO codes already in use.)

Corrections to codes and names

The ISO 639-3 standard specifies a unique language identifier (3-letter code), and the name of the language associated with that code. Now that Ethnologue's nomenclature is to serve as the basis for this international standard, SIL will have the "administrative authority" for the coding of living languages -- supervising the addition of new language codes, merging codes, retiring codes, etc. LinguistList will work in coordination with SIL to provide an equivalent service for the extinct and classical languages that Ethnologue does not include.

Ethnologue is setting up a process to identify and correct inconsistencies and errors in its database, and to formally recommend any changes in codes and names to the ISO. The code and name problems can be of several different kinds:

1. Cases where a single language is incorrectly assumed by Ethnologue to be multiple languages, and so has multiple codes.
2. Cases where multiple languages are incorrectly assumed by Ethnologue to be a single language, and so have a single code.
3. Cases where Ethnologue mistakenly assigns a code to a language that does not appear to exist.
4. Cases where known languages have no code at all.
5. Cases where the main Ethnologue name for a language is not the name by which the language is most commonly known (either by speakers or by scholars and others).

To recommend a change from the standard code and name (i.e., those specified in Ethnologue 15), there will be an official procedure which involves filling out forms and providing solid justification. The formal process for this has not yet been reviewed by the ISO 639 Joint Advisory Committee, as Part 3 is still officially a Draft International Standard. However, the forms which SIL proposes to use are available upon request from the ISO 639-3 Registrar, Joan Spanne (iso639-3@sil.org), and will be processed when the draft standard is formally adopted by the ISO.

The plan is to have proposed changes to the codes and names of indigenous languages of the Americas reviewed by a special SSILA COMMITTEE ON LANGUAGE CODES. Completed forms can be returned either to the ISO 639-3 Registrar, who will consult with the Committee as appropriate, or they can be sent directly to the Committee, who, after review, will pass them on to SIL with a recommendation. The Committee's role will be significant, since Ethnologue has only a small staff and will not be able to process requests rapidly. The Committee can be reached through its vice-chair, Marianne Mithun (mithun@linguistics.ucsb.edu) until August 1, and through its chair, Lyle Campbell (lyle.campbell@linguistics.utah.edu) after then. The other members of the committee are Willem Adelaar, Gary Holton, and Eduardo Rivail Ribeiro.

Other corrections and updates

Family classifications, as well as information on numbers of speakers and their locations, are not part of the ISO 639-3 standard. However, they are an important part of the Ethnologue database, and when more recent and accurate information is available, or where classifications are out of step with consensus views of scholars, comment is invited. Suggestions and updates should be sent to Ethnologue_Editor@sil.org. M. Paul Lewis (paul_lewis@sil.org), the Ethnologue Editor, and Conrad Hurd (Managing Editor) will also be willing to answer questions about procedures.

* Terminology development in Amerindian languages
From José Alvarez (jalvar@cantv.net) 11 April 2006:

I will be involved in a project aimed at developing basic scientific terminology in Amerindian languages of Venezuela for use in primary and secondary schools. I am looking for references and other sources about the process of lexicon development. I have conducted fruitless searches in the WWW. I am fully aware that an understanding of the structure of the language is crucial for creating new terms (for example, derivational morphology and compounding), but I need something like general guidelines, theory of lexicon creation, and information about current and past projects in this area. Thank you.

237.2 Summer Course in Quechua

From Serafin M Coronel-Molina (scoronel@Princeton.edu) 10 April 2007:

The Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies, University of Illinois at Urbana Champaign, offers an intensive summer course in Quechua for graduate students and undergraduates from any university. The instructor is Sixto C. Soto (s-soto3@uiuc.edu), a native Quechua speaker and author with 15 years of experience teaching at the University of Illinois. The course runs from June 12 to August 2.

Quechua, with 8-10 million speakers, is the most widely spoken Native American language. It is spoken in the Andean Countries (Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia). Colombia, Chile, Argentina and Brazil also have Quechua speaking communities.

Quechua has been taught continuously at the University of Illinois at U-C since 1977. We provide classes with variety of teaching materials: the traditional written materials, videos, slides and computerized lessons.
